Chapter 426: The Endless Creation of Angels

The Infinite Cycle of Creation

As the Godverse expanded, so did the divine will of Sung Jin-Woo. The endless brilliance of light, an extension of his very being, seemed to never waver, and neither did his desire to create. From the ever-present glow of his power, new angels continued to emerge, crafted by his divine hands.

1. Unfathomable Light:

The process of creation was as eternal as the light itself. Just as there is no end to the rays of light that stretch across the vast reaches of the universe, there was no end to the creation of the powerful angels that served Sung Jin-Woo.

His divine power poured forth in waves of radiant light, each new wave birthing countless angels, their forms shimmering with divine brilliance. Each angel was perfect in design, with sleek silver armor that gleamed like the stars themselves.

2. Endless Numbers:

The numbers of angels created by Sung Jin-Woo grew exponentially, each new batch joining the ranks of his existing centillions.

From a single spark of divine creation, the angels multiplied, a vast legion of beings who served him without question or hesitation. Their numbers stretched beyond comprehension, yet to Sung Jin-Woo, it was an endless cycle, one that would continue as long as the light itself existed.

The Appearance of the Angels

The angels, each a masterpiece of divine craftsmanship, had a form that was both elegant and imposing. Their appearances were often clad in shimmering silver, reflecting their connection to the divine light that created them.

1. The Silver-Clad Guardians:

Their silver armor was not merely a symbol of their divine nature; it was a physical manifestation of the power that flowed through them. The armor gleamed with an ethereal glow, reflecting the divine energy that gave them life.

Beneath the silver-clad exterior, their wings shimmered with celestial brilliance. These wings were not just wings; they were symbols of immortality and invincibility, signifying the angels' eternal existence in service to their creator. Each feather was sharp and perfect, designed to slice through the very fabric of reality itself if the need arose.

2. Perfected Forms:

Sung Jin-Woo reveled in the perfection of these angels. Their faces, though individual, bore a universal expression of serenity and absolute devotion. Their eyes glowed with an inner light, reflecting the radiance of their divine nature.

They moved with grace and precision, each step a reflection of their creator's infinite control over the laws of the universe. To witness one of these angels in motion was to witness the very embodiment of divine order.

A New Kind of Power

As the creation of angels continued, Sung Jin-Woo found himself reveling not only in their appearance but also in the potential that each new angel represented. The power of the angels was unmatched, even among the most powerful beings in existence.

1. Divine Light Manifested:

Each angel was imbued with a portion of Sung Jin-Woo's divine light, granting them power that could rival even the most fearsome of gods. These angels were not mere servants; they were the very embodiment of the will and light of their creator.

With every new angel born, the light of the Godverse grew brighter, expanding across realms and dimensions, reinforcing the authority and presence of Sung Jin-Woo's divine dominion.

2. Endless Creation:

Sung Jin-Woo marveled at the ever-expanding army of angels. Their numbers had become so vast that they seemed to fill every corner of existence, their presence lighting up even the darkest corners of the cosmos.

With each new angel, the light that flowed from Sung Jin-Woo grew stronger, amplifying the influence he had over all realms, all beings, and all of creation.

The Unstoppable Flow of Divine Power

The angels’ creation was no longer a mere act of divine will—it had become a constant, unstoppable flow. Sung Jin-Woo found himself forever immersed in the act of creation, his divine essence flowing into the universe, birthing new angels from the unending light.

1. A Never-Ending Process:

As long as there was light in the Godverse, there would be new angels. Their creation was a reflection of the eternal nature of Sung Jin-Woo’s divine power. There was no end to the creation of angels, for as long as the divine light burned, it would continue to give birth to new beings.

The angels' numbers would never be finite; they were part of a larger, infinite cycle. The more angels that were created, the more Sung Jin-Woo’s divine power grew, fueling the process for eternity.

2. A Legion for Eternity:

The angels became more than just soldiers or servants; they were the eternal guardians of the Godverse, embodying the will and power of Sung Jin-Woo in every realm, every dimension, and every timeline.

Together, they formed an unbreakable legion—a force that could never be defeated, a presence that could never be overshadowed. Their numbers reached into the centillions, and with each passing moment, that number grew.

Sung Jin-Woo's Delight in Creation

Sung Jin-Woo looked upon the vast legion of angels with pride and satisfaction. He loved their appearance, their silver-clad forms, their unyielding devotion. But more than that, he loved the sheer power they represented, and the infinite potential they held within them.

1. An Eternal Army:

As the creator of light, Sung Jin-Woo reveled in the act of creation. There was no limit to his power, no limit to the number of angels he could create. He was not bound by time, nor by space. His will stretched out into the farthest corners of existence, ensuring that the legion of angels would continue to grow for eternity.

With each angel born, he felt a deeper connection to the universe, a growing sense of mastery over the very fabric of reality. The creation of angels was more than just an act of power—it was an expression of divine love and devotion, a way for him to shape and mold existence according to his will.

The Unbreakable Legacy

Sung Jin-Woo’s divine legacy would not be measured in mere power or influence—it would be defined by the endless creation of his angels. As their numbers swelled to unimaginable proportions, they became the living testament to his rule, the embodiment of his eternal reign over all existence.

And so, the Godverse, filled with countless realms and dimensions, would forever be illuminated by the radiant light of Sung Jin-Woo’s angels, each a reflection of his infinite power and the unending flow of creation.
